

Safety in the Workplace Tips

Establishing workplace safety provides a morale-boosting environment for employees.

Whereas the groundwork for workplace safety has been laid by government legislations, compliance to these guide behaviors must not be construed as an additional financial burden to companies but as a very sound investment toward increased productivity; rightly achieved with eliminating health-related expenses, production downtimes, and material losses due to workplace accidents.

The following work safety tips, whereas not very comprehensive, covers a general area of workplace-safety program that can prevent accidents and save damages to materials and personnel injuries or death.

- Gain the commitment of the facilities entire team toward work place safety
- Perform an onsite assessment to identify all manner of safety related risk, document them, and then manage them in accordance with the hazards they pose.
- Follow the system of Plan, Do, Check, Act, and then do it again.
- Ensure that workplace safety signs are installed in appropriate locations and that the safety signs meanings are understood and followed by all.
- Involve everybody in the formulation and implementation of safety practices in the workplace from identifying and appointing the company's Safety Officer who will be responsible for the full implementation of the program down to the Committee who will be tasked to implement, monitor, and evaluate the same.
- Instill in every employee, that their workplace behaviors toward safety, not only affects his/her well-being, but also the safety of his/her fellow workers.
- Ensure that the program is not only written in directives or instructions but are also simulated through meetings and periodic drills.
- Monitoring and compliance of the safety program shall cover reporting and investigation; not only of the major accidents, but also those that are minor and the near misses.
- In particular, in the factory where workers are exposed to more hazards of work, appropriate PPE signage must be installed for everybody to be guided toward the proper protective equipment to use.

Virtually, infinite tips can be written about workplace safety, detailing everything from the broadest to the finest details. The most important consideration for everybody to safety is therefore not on memorizing each one of them but acquiring and maintaining that proper behavior toward the attainment of zero workplace accidents.

Definitely, the safety moments enjoyed in the workplace translate not only to enhanced productivity of the company but also more importantly toward employees well-being.